The Minister of War had retired General Faurie, and four other generals, on the recommendation net only of the chief of the general staff, General Joffre, the de facto generalisation of the army, but also of the Suprame Council of War, which, composed of the foremost generals on the active list, constitutes an advisory board in all military matters to the minister. The officers thus disciplined had shown themselves to be lamentably incompentent during the recent army maneoeuvres and were responsible for the confusion which marred the operations—operations that culminated

It is an officer of this rank, namely,
General Duchesne, who commanded in Council of War, which, composed of the army of invasion of Madagastions—operations that culminated in something very much akin to a flasco. General Faurie was regarded as specially blameworthy, and should have been retired long ago. At the recent manoeuvres he allowed his army corps to be enveloped by the enemy. and heoretically wiped out, while in the grand manocurres of 1911 he dis-tinguished himself by getting captured with his entire staff by the cavalry of the opposing forces.

To this must be added that General Fauria is generally hated in the army, for the reason that he owed his advancement to the rank of full general to the assistance which he gave to General Andre, when Minister of War, in the so-called "affairo des fiches. Andre inaugurated a system of fiches or dossiers for officers throughout the army, the dossiers or secret records of each omcer, dealing with his political, and, above all, with his religious opinions, and those of his family; records plonage, and even of anonymous de-nunciations of a mendacious character, based purely on spite.

The unpopularry of this system and the use made thereof, was such, that General Andre was eventually deprived of his portfolio by the Premier, and driven into retirement, followed by the exercations, not only of the entire army, but also of the public. Al-though Faurie had been his principal lieutenant and assistant in the matter. yet he managed to save himself from the shipwreck of his chief and to hang on until now, when he has been publicly retired for gross military incompetence, and is now about to be punished for insubordination.

General Fauric repudiates the imputation of incompetency, and insists that he is being persecuted on account of his advanced republican opinions, and also because of his attitude towards the church, asserting that the general staff of the army, and, indeed, the entire War Department, are honey combed with Jesuitism and monarchi-cal intrigues, ascribing the leadership thereof to the deputy chief of the gen-eral staff, namely, General the Marquis de Castelnau. He has appealed for as-sistance to the extreme left of the Chamber of Deputies, to the most ad-vanced organs of the radical press, and to the antireligious, antimilitary element generally, and his care is bound to become the subject of much pro-longed and acrimonious parliamentary

In response to these allegations of his, it is pointed out that the measures adopted against Faurle were recom-mended, not by General de Castelnau, but by the Supreme Council of War, the republicanism, the impartiality, and he military competency of which are

General Faurie's punishment is a foregone conclusion. Already retired by ministerial decree, his name will be removed from the ranks of the army, and he will cease to have the right either to style himself general or wear the uniform of his present rank. The last instance in which a general of the French army was subjected to this penalty, was that of General Boulanger, who subsequently committed suicide at Brussels.

Of course, all this affair, which has created no end of a stir in France, and, indeed, in military circles all over Europe, has had the result of attracting attention to General Joure, chief of the general staff, and who, as such, in the event of war, would be invested, by virtue of his office, with supreme military command. He is very highly thought of, both at Berlin and at St. Petersburg; hails from the Pyrennees, commanded a battery of artillery during the siege of Parls, although only cighteen at the time, and but recently commissioned as a second Heutenant. Among the features of his career, were his capture for France of the mysteri-ous Central African city of Timbuctoo, the military organization of the Is-land of Madagascar, after its conquest, and numerous successful campaigns in the wars of Indo-China. He is known as one of the best mathematicians in the army, as a mean of much constructive force, absolutely rigid will, and of great reticence.

There is only one subject on which he ever allows himself to become cloquent, namely, the necessity of assuming the offensive, Instead of waiting to be attacked. These, he declares, to be the only tactics which should be em-ployed with French troops. No one enjoys a greater amount of confidence on the part of the rank and file, who lescribe him as "an excellent watch dog: calm, but always ready to bite."

So numerous have been the automobile accidents of late, resulting from the presence at the wheel of women. who are apt to lose their head in a moment of sudden emergency, that popular sentiment is becoming averse to the grant of licenses to the fair sex.

Of course, it will be difficult to prohibit the latter altogether from driving motors, since there are some women who are aderts in the art, and extremely level-neaded. But there is no doubt that restrictions should be placed upon young girls and mere chil-dren in the matter.

In this connection, let me recall that In this connection, let me recall that in the reign of Leuis XV of France, it became the fashion for women in Paris to drive their own cabridlets, and the number of accidents became appalling. The lieutenant-general of police, the Comte de Sartines, realized the delicacy of the problem, in view of the enormous influence exercised in those days at the court of Versailles by women, such as Mme, de Pompadour, etc. Finally, after much cogitation, he isat the court of Versailles by women, such as Mme. de Pompadour, etc. Finally, after much cogitation, he issued an edict prohibiting any woman to drive her own cabriolet, unless she had attained the age of forty. Within twenty-four hours there was not a single feminine whip to be seen on the streets of Paris.

Municipal and State authorities on this side of the ocean might do worse than take a leaf out of M. de Sartiners thook, and decree that no woman should receive a license to drive a motor, unless forty years of age. This would prove quite as effective in their case as in that of the fair drivers of cabriolets in Paris under the reign of Louis XV.
